DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 6- 9, 11 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Hatae et al. (2003/0172201) in view of Saito et al.(6,751,221).

With regards to claims 6-7, 11, Hatae teaches a method for managing the connection of a plurality devices which are point-to-point connected by a digital interface(Fig. 10), the method comprising:

a second device(Fig. 10, controller), which establishes a point to point connection between an arbitrary first device(Fig. 10, source) and another device(Fig. 10, destination), receiving a connection release request command requesting the second device to break the point to point connection from the first device(see col. 12 , para. 0266-68, implicitly taught because according to Hatae the controller releases the connection when data transfer is complete, hence the completion of a data transfer is equivalent to a request to release); the second device breaking the point to point connection in response to the connection release request command.(col. 12, para 0268), wherein the release request command is defined within an audio-video control command transaction set(Fig. 10 AVC/CTS command, this is unique to IEEE 1394 and is used for transactions between consumer audio/video equipment over and IEEE 1394 bus). Even though the use of the release command is not explicitly taught in Hatae, it is taught by Saito(Fig. 30). It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to combine Saito with Hatae for the purpose of enabling the issuing of release command to the controller. The motivation being to release the controller from having to determine if the data transfer is completed, hence releasing the controller from having to track this activity.

Claims 8-9 are rejected because in Hatae a clear connection is exchanges between the destination and the controller and the source and the controller(Fig. 10).

Claim 10 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Hatae et al. (2003/0172201) in view of Saito et al.(6,751,221), as in claim 1 and further in view of Scheel et al.(6,445,711).

With regards to claim 10, Hatae teaches the plug and play function being associated with IEEE 1394. However no mention is made of the IEC 61883 standard. This taught by Scheel(col 2 lines 37-44). I would have been obvious to combine Scheel with Hatae and Saito for the purpose of implementing the plug and play function. The motivation being to enable the dynamic addition or removal the bus while other devices continue to operate.
